TWELFTH NIGHT

THE KNACK

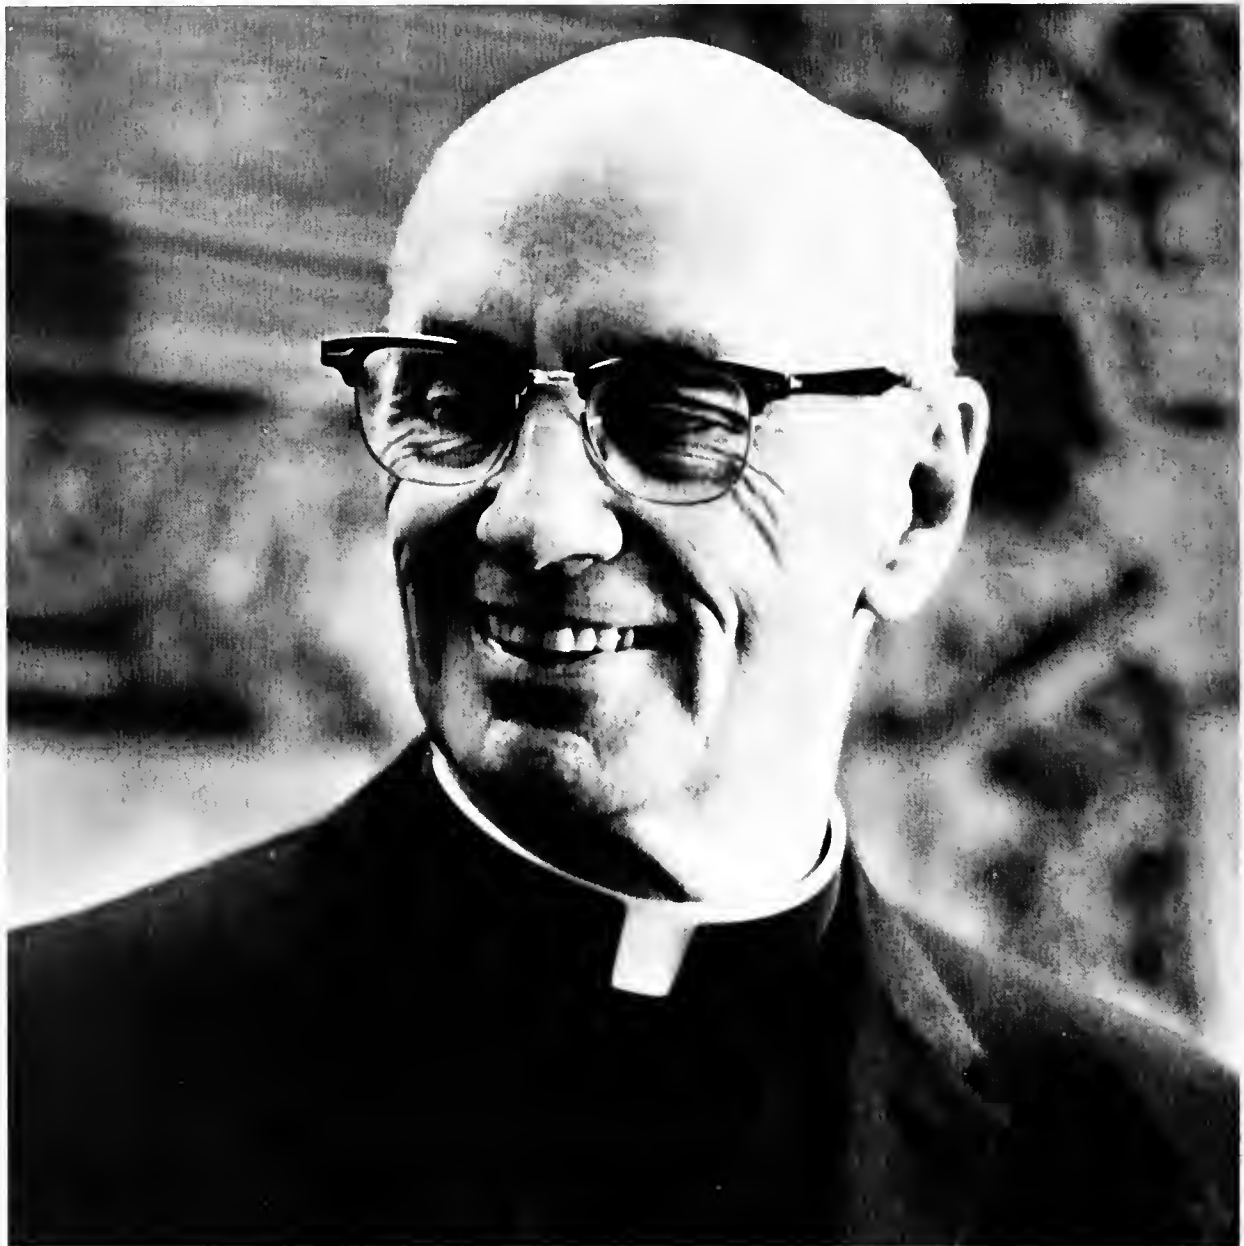

From the John J. Murphy collection

The time is past when we would wonder about those anonymous people who controlled our school the jokes still ring true about seeing Fr. Maguire only at orientation and graduation the execs were as fluid as out thoughts of time past.

as the time past and the seasons changed we could rely on one eternal constant

in the finest traditions of jebbie run conservative reaction the "powers that be" killed the forces for change in the endless bureaucratic bull of knowledge in the service of no longer are we enrolled sometimes day sometimes night school the year of going to talk to father cunningham at the law school or hear someone at hines is not only a thought-concept those impossible (maybe that's spelled impractical)

business courses are over as are those long nursing practicals but they are still so clear in our minds that we fail to see that it is time past

its a long time past since the black book was in your possession and the endless streams of smokers ended only to begin anew but the greek life is still able to be summed up in the word brother sister whether as an organization we were good or bad is unimportant we were a community of sisters of brothers of friends that what is important is that that held us together and that that held us together was we were and always will be greek

The 1970 LOYOLAN. We call it a yearbook, but it is much more than just a book. It is a living entity, conceived amid a flurry of planning, slowly and painstakingly brought to maturity with hours, days, weeks of labor. In terms of production, the book is "dead." Between its covers, however, is a living memorial, a microcosm. The past year has been eternalized; a slice of life has been taken out and preserved.

The production of any book demands much hard work, cooperation, and sacrifice from many people. I would like at this time to thank my entire staff for the many hours of labor which they unselfishly gave to the production of the 1970 LOYOLAN. I wish to give special thanks to Dan Tracy, John Esposito, Bonnie Zarling, Peggy Ochab, and Dave Schaab.

It is unreasonable to expect this book will elicit no criticism. In planning it, I was faced with many options, and chose those which I felt were most effectual. If, as Editor-In-Chief, I can accept any praise given to this product, then I am also to be held responsible for anything worthy of criticism. My staff is not to be castigated, for they received their instructions and performed in all instances to the best of their ability.
